Banana Cone[®] & Banana Sign[®]

You can now buy the award-winning Banana Cone from Robert Scott.

Effective at gaining attention, these safety signs stand out from the crowd. While the Banana signs are printed with warning messages, it's definitely the shape's design that stands out.

So much so that in a perception study of 246 participants to determine its effectiveness against different signs and cones, the Banana Cone significantly outperformed all, and more than 22 times that of standard A-Frames.

As attention is a prerequisite to message processing, the design is more than just a gimmick – and helps to support the avoidance of slips and trips.

The cones are printed on all four sides so can be easily viewed from 360°, are stackable (with the stems removed), while the A-frame is collapsible for easy storage and features anti-slide rubber stoppers.

The Banana Cone and Banana Sign are made from polypropylene and the stems from ABS.

The banana peel slip

The global banana peel slip dates back to the 19th century when a lack of sanitation and regulations resulted in an abundance of street waste. As it doesn't take long for bananas to rot, they have become widely associated with comedy slip gags worldwide, and the banana peel slip is now recognised by children and adults alike, making the 'don't slip' warning inherent in the shape of the cone.

How to adjust the stem

Turn 10mm clockwise to secure and 10mm counter-clockwise to remove. Be sure to firmly press and turn the stem as the connection is designed to be tight. If this doesn't work, readjust the connection of the stem and try a different groove.
